How to Screen Mirror Android to Windows PC

How to share smartphone screen to laptop. How to share laptop screen to phone.

When you want to share your smartphone's screen to help troubleshoot your handset, you have to use a remote control app or send a screen recording. Now, you can use the Skype app to easily share your iPhone or Android screen. How to Share Your Android Screen Using Skype Open the Skype app on your Android smartphone and make sure that you're running the latest version (it works for Android 6.0 and higher). Before you get started, you'll have to give the app permission to access audio and video recording capabilities on your device. Now navigate to a conversation where you want to share your screen and tap on the "Video Call" button. Once the call has been accepted, you'll see the familiar video calling interface. Here, tap on the three-dot Menu button in the bottom-right corner. Now, choose the "Share screen" option. Android will ask you if you want to share your screen using the Skype app. Here, tap on "Start Now". If you don't want the app to ask you every time you use the feature, check the "Don't Ask Again" box. The screen sharing will begin. You can exit the Skype app and switch to the app or the screen you want to show to the person on the other end of the call. Once you're done, you can come back to the Skype app and then tap on the "Stop sharing" button at the top of the screen to stop sharing your screen. You can continue the call if you wish or you can tap on the red "End Call" button to end the call. How to Share Your iPhone Screen Using Skype The process for sharing the screen on your iPhone or iPad is slightly different. The Skype app uses the screen recording and broadcast feature first introduced in iOS 11. On your iPhone or iPad, open the Skype app and navigate to the conversation where you want to share the screen. Here, tap on the Video Call button in the top toolbar. Once the video call starts, tap on the three-dot Menu button. From here, select the "Share Screen" option. You'll see a full-screen overlay on the screen telling you about the Broadcast feature. You'll see the Skype app on the list. Tap "Skype" to select it and then tap on the "Start Broadcast" button. You'll see a red pill around the time in the top-left corner (or a red bar on top of the screen on older iPhones and iPads). This means that you're now sharing your device's screen. If it doesn't work on the first try, stop the screen sharing and try again). You can now navigate to other apps and Skype will continue to record and share your screen to the caller on the other end. When you're done, you can come back to the Skype app and then tap on the "Stop sharing" button. Alternatively, you can also tap on the Red Pill button in the top-left corner of the screen. If you want, you can go back to the Menu and share your screen again. Once you're done, tap on the red "End Call" button to stop the video call. You can use a similar built-in feature called Screen Recording to directly record your iPhone or iPad screen. Our smartphones are pretty amazing little devices. Not only are they at the heart of our communications, but they're far more powerful than most of the computers of a decade ago. So why do we need both a smartphone and a computer? Many of us don't. A Kickstarter campaign has been started for a laptop shell that actually uses your smartphone's brains to operate. Basically, your phone becomes your computer, simply by plugging it into the device, called the Superbook. The Superbook is basically a laptop dock that turns any Android smartphone into a computer. It looks exactly like a laptop, but instead of having all of its components inside the shell, it uses your phone's components. This seriously cuts down on costs. At the heart of the computer is Andromium, an app that turns data from your phone into data that can be more easily interfaced with on a computer screen. Because its based on Android, it will be a little limited for some people, but as a basic daily driver, considering there are plenty of great apps for Android, it could certainly be plenty in many cases. The Superbook itself offers eight hours of battery life, as well as a full keyboard and a multitouch trackpad. The device measures 7.6 x 11.3 x 0.7 inches and weighs just 2 pounds, so it's a very portable option indeed. Once you plug in your smartphone, the Superbook will basically be an extension of your phone with a desktop-type interface. All of the files on the smartphone will be accessible, and the computer will use your phone's Wi-Fi and Bluetooth connection to connect to the internet and other peripherals. Perhaps the best thing about it is the fact that it only costs $100 — that's right, for a tiny fraction of the price of other computers, you can access your email, social media, Office apps, and so on — which is what most people need from their computer anyway. To use the Superbook, you'll need an Android device that has Android 5.0 or later, a dual core processor, 1.5GB of RAM, and at least 25MB of free storage. Of course, it remains to be seen just how well the device functions, and while the early bird specials are all gone, you can back the project for as little as $100, after which you'll get one for yourself in February 2017. Editors' Recommendations (Image credit: Laptop Mag) No matter how careful you are, there's going to be a moment where you misplace your Android phone. And if you're like me, there's going to be extreme sweating and anxiety until you find it. And whether it slipped between the couch cushions or some sticky-fingered pilferer absconded with it, we've found a few ways to help you track down your missing device and alleviate all that stress. Here are the fastest methods to find your Android phone without having to spend any money on a new app or subscription.(Image credit: Laptop Mag)How to find your Android phone: Google's Find My Device Google's device tracking app is called Find My Device and is easily the best option when searching for a lost Android phone. Especially since it doesn't even require that the app be installed on your smartphone. As long as your Android phone is signed into a Google Account, then Find My Device is activated by default. As long as you didn't disable location services or Find My Device on your Android phone, you can use this method to find any Android phone that is powered on and signed into your Google account. Here's how to find your Android phone using Google's Find My Device: Using any browser go to Android.com/find (opens in new tab) and sign in or select the relevant Google account. Select the device from the list in the upper-left corner. You will see the phone on the map to the right. Tap on Play Sound to make the phone ring for five minutes even if it is set to vibrate or silent. If the phone was stolen or is lost in a public place, you may wish to select Secure Device to lock the device, sign it out of your Google account and display a message on the screen with a phone number or email address to contact to return the phone. You can still track the phone. Finally, you can opt to Erase Device which deletes all of your content from the phone. However, you will no longer be able to find the phone. This should only be used as a last resort if you know the phone is stolen. Find My Device is a simple app. However, I've tested it numerous times over the years and it is extremely fast and reliable so by far the best choice to quickly find your Android phone. (Image credit: Google) How to find your Android phone: Google Assistant This option is only really useful for times when you know the phone is lost in your home or otherwise nearby. But since that's where most phones are lost, it can be quite handy. This requires that the missing device has Google Assistant on and signed into the same Google account as the phone. No additional software is required. Here's how to find your Android phone using Google Assistant: Say "Hey Google" Tell it to "Find my phone" Specify which phone if you have multiple phones Say "Yes" when it asks if you would like it to ring that phone That's it. Just like Find My Device, Google Assistant will make the phone ring for up to five minutes regardless of the volume settings. However, Google has been trying to improve with its "Better Together" initiative started in 2018 and last July we reported on some major changes coming. Now, the team at 9to5Google has uncovered signs that these efforts are getting closer to fruition with a new feature referred to as "Eche" in Chrome tags. Based on the code, it appears to be a screen mirroring feature exclusive to Pixel devices. Chrome tags often reveal features ahead of time as the developers need to lay the groundwork for the functionality in Chromium. If you are unfamiliar, these are the toggles in the Chromium code that let you enable and disable features, for example, here's how to turn off the new grid tab layout for Chrome on Android using Chrome tags. In this case, the code allows you to "Enable Eche App SWA," meaning a System Web App. It appears that this built-in app will allow you to essentially cast (Eche means "throw" or "cast" in Spanish) an app on your phone to your Chromebook and then interact with the app. There do appear to be limitations regarding which apps will support this functionality — whether this is a determination the system is making or something app developers will need to handle isn't clear at the moment. Additional notation in the code also points to this being an exclusive feature for Pixel devices at launch. Google has been making a point of highlighting some features as "Pixel-first" lately, so this wouldn't be a surprise and doesn't indicate it will be a permanent Pixel exclusive. While features showing up in Chromium flags don't give us a hard timeline for their release, with Google I/O likely happening in May, that would seem like a perfect time for this feature to get an official release.
