It was their last album with Russell who left Somebodyâ € 1969 Â «1971: solo career and « The Real Thing » Main article: The Real Thing article: The (Russell Morris) Morris's first single solo was an extravagance of about seven minutes of production around a song titled « The Real Thing » was written by Johnny Young, produced by Molly Meldrum and designed by John L Sayers. The soundtrack was performed by members of the Soul band by Melbourne The Groop, which included Brian Cadd, Richard Wright (drums) and Don Mutie (low), in addition to the guitarist of Zoot Roger Hicks (which developed the acoustic guitar riff) And Ronnie Charles (The Groop) singers, Chiffons (including Maureen Elkner) and marches. Sue Brady and Judy Condon "The real Thing" is one of the classic psychedelic singles of the 1960s. the release disturbed the radio programmers, to whom he had never been asked to play a single Australian so long before, and a short shortwho omitted the extended tail was often played. At about six minutes and thirty seconds, it was the longest pop single recorded in Australia at the time, although the Beatles' "Hey Jude" at almost seven minutes was released the year before and is an obvious influence on the extended structure of the song. The single reached Australia's Number 1 in June 1969, and number one in Chicago, Houston and New York City, despite difficulties in international distribution. It was the best-selling Australian single of 1969. The song was followed by "Part Three into Paper Walls" which was released in July 1969. The track was co-written by Johnny Young and Morris and arranged by John Farrar. The single received ample airplay making it a number one double recording, the first time an Australian artist had scored consecutive numbers with the first two singles. Many radio stations have also begun to flip the single and play the lush B-side ballad "The Girl That I Love", thus extending the duration of the single, and revealing to radio listeners another facet of Russell's singing talents. "Morris Mania" was in full swing, with a busy schedule of live appearances and the continued invaluable support of Uptight and Go-Set.[8] Morris, meanwhile, traveled to the UK to help promote "The Real Thing" but the song didn't perform well. Morris returned to Australia in December 1969 and performed a concert in Brisbane, attended by 5,000 people, of which more than 100 were taken by ambulance due to 'advanced hysteria'. Raymond Froggatt, which it reached on 23 May 1970. The song became a big hit in New Zealand, where it reached July 1, 1970. "Mr America" followed, which was a riff-heavy and gospel-flavored number with a female choral support. Coupled with the equally strong B-side, "Stand Together", the single turned Russell to the charts, hitting the national Top 10 in January 1971. "Mr America" also won Morris the TV Week's Music Awards for "Composer of the Year." 1971â1973: Bloodstone and Wings of an Eagle and Other Great Hits Morris focused on his musical writing and with the cream of Australian musicians including Brian Cadd, Rick Springfield, Beeb Birtles and Marcie Jones, he spent a almost a year recording and re-recording the Bloodstone album. The album was recorded at Channel 9's TCS Studios and produced by Howard Gable. "Sweet Love", supported by the funky album, Band-ish, cut "Jail Jonah's Daughter" in June and reached July 7, 1971, while the album made the national Top 20, reaching September 12 and gaining critical acclaim. "Living with Friends" and "Law of an Eagle" were also at the top 20. In March 1973, EMI The albums released the first successful compilation called Wings of an Eagle and Other Great Hits, which reached 12th place in Australia. 1973-1977: New York and Russell Morris in 1975, Morris moved to London to record deal he expected. He moved to New York and worked on an album there. He released Russell Morris in 1975 on the Wizard label of Robie Porter in Australia and on RCA for the American version. Instead, Morris returned to Australia 1978-1996: Australia, Russell Morris bands and A Thousand Suns Main articles: Foot in the Door (album) and Quasi Frantic Once Morris returned to Australia, he formed the Russell Morris Band. The band signed with Mushroom Records and started playing live, writing songs designed to be played live rather than chasing airplay, but scoring a few minor hits on the road. In the end, the band played and recorded as Russell Morris & the Rubes. Morris also took over the Lonely Boys in the 1980s and also moved to the musical stage, appearing as 'Riff Raff' in a Melbourne production of The Rocky Horror Show and a few years later taking on the role of Simon Zealotes in the 1992 successful arena production of Jesus Christ Superstar next to John Farnham, Kate Ceberano, Angry Anderson and Jon Stevens. In November 1991, Morris released another solo album, A Thousand Suns, which reached number 98.[11] 1996-2006: Bands with Ronnie Burns, Darryl Cotton and Jim Keays Main article: Burns Cotton & Morris, Cotton Keays & Morris and The Real Thing (album Russell Morris) In 1996, Morris joined singers Ronnie Burns and Darryl Cotton, and began shooting under the name Burns Cotton Keays & Morris. They released five albums over the next five years. The trio toured until Darryl Cotton died in 2012. Also in 2000, Morris' "The Real Thing" as a single, the first time this highly appreciated band had chosen to record a cover. At Gimme Ted's concert on March 9, 2001 Morris performed two songs. [12] In 2002 he took a place of honor among his peers as part of the huge success Long Way to the Top concert tour.
