Federali who are not considered Judges
A e A e for the purposes of Article III, and, therefore, have no life in office, but they are doing the kind of judges usually make: Settle disputes among people. These administrative officials usually serve only for a few years, after that the president can replace. There are safeguard measures to prevent officials from being openly part or unfair, but because they are named Often, they are often designed to be reactive to the daily policies of the judges. Why let these officials to resolve disputes in the way the judges do, even if they do not have the guarantee of keeping life that the judges have? The answer is complicated, but the basic idea is that you generally the right to appeal from a decision of one of these officials to a judge whose independence is protected by the kept for life. Thus the judges - understandably, potentially, the Supreme Court - will have the final word, and that, the Supreme Court said, it is sufficient to maintain the principle of judicial independence sanctioned by Article III.
