As a proud Latina and Mexican-American, I'm used to people saying offensive things about me. Rarely are these insults more painful than when they come from a politician, however. If a politician doesn't represent you in office, I still take offense for their hateful speech because, as an American, I don't want these values to be reflected in government at any level. Speaking as one, here are some things that marginalized people wish the male politicians knew about them and their causes, because we are so tired of having to explain. Everyone is on a lifelong learning curve, so it's important to give politicians, especially those from undiversified backgrounds, a chance to catch up to the point where the longest activists are now. But at the same time, marginalized communities should not be constantly educating people. These struggles for basic equality have been going on for centuries and those who have not gotten the message now probably refuse to accept it, not incapable of learning. More than anything else, marginalized people don't want to feel marginalized anymore. When we are included with conversations, hierarchies and decisions, it goes a very long way toward decreasing the power gap between the privileged and the marginalized. So, politicians, make sure you don't read marginalized people, but actually talk and include them as well. We are a community of individualsSpencer Platt / Getty Images News / Getty Imagesyes, there are things that bind us together, be it our race, ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation, etc. But that doesn't make us all the same. We have different experiences, and you can't take anything from us. We talk investing instead of making assumptions about ourselves, or letting people who are not members of our community speak for us, ask us things! We tell you about our lives and experiences instead of acting as if you already know everything. We come to Peacedrew Angerereder / Getty Images News / Getty Images Our cause is not directly harmful to you à ~ "We are looking for the best we see fit to make the world a better place, for us and for you. We like to think that the justice we strive will bring to all together. We're your friends, or at least we should be Jimmy Dwalleebe on Twitterif you can't look around your life and see at least one person who might have humanized our cause for you, you need new friends. If you diversify your social circles, you'll diversify your perspective, and you could come and see our point of view. We are still fighting for the Basicsam WilleyÀÀÀÀ ã ~ À²À on Twitter promises that there is no "agenda" to take over "at the moment many marginalized communities are still fighting for basic human dignity, not power. So don't crush our demands thinking that we are Take something from you. There are so many more than you realize the CBS this morning on YouTubein many marginalized communities, activists that are vocal are just a little small of the communities they represent. You need to extrapolate from what you are seeing and hearing, and realize that there are many others who feel the same way but do not have the resources or the security to speak. Our histories and cultures deserve respect We are much more than what you see today. We are the product of all generations before us, many of whom fought battles even more courageous than we are today. Everyone should know those stories, especially the people who claim to represent us in government. And that's part of the reason we're fightingAlice Paul Institute on Twitter We can't let the sacrifices of those who came before us be in vain, so there's pretty much nothing anyone can say or do to stop us. Progress can't be stopped, so you need to get on this train or it's leaving the station without you. We want the same things you doJustin Sullivan/Getty Images News/Getty Images We're all trying to buy in the American Dream, but right now we're telling you that systemic forces are preventing us from imagining reaching the levels you can. We don't automatically hate youDavid McNew/Getty Images News/Getty Images We don't have a problem with men à our problem is about institutionalized sexism and patriarchy. If you want to work sincerely with us, we will be more than happy to have you. On the other hand, don't undermine our legitimate problems with you by claiming that we are blinding hate. If we're clearing our concerns with you, you'd better believe they're real. It might be better if you just let us be in ChargeCis, male politicians may think they have the right combination of personality, passion and timing for the effect of change, and it is admirable to have the self-confidence and altruism to want to take on the responsibility of public office. But consider this à almost every male politician who came before having the same idea, and most of them was wrong. It might be time to just doubt yourself a little and let someone else step in to work, especially if someone manages to represent and support their marginalized community. If all politicians knew these 13 things, it seems the nation would be better off than it is now. Peace, justice and equality are all want, but people must learn to want those things for others, not just for themselves. Until then, I and other members of marginalized communities will continue our struggles for freedom. Keep up with the latest daily news with the BuzzFeed Daily newsletter! The world is getting smaller à and so, too, is consumer technology. This year's best tech toys are all in size, weight and sleek design. Here is our wish list for the holidays. Yours HDTV. You watched the Olympics on the huge and rich color plasma television of your friend, and it was good, very good. You've visited again for the World Series. Lately, you went to Simpson's replicas. (Mmm. Big screen.) The weather has has The image quality of plasma screens has improved dramatically à then before your friend changes his locks, get one of your own. You can do this without cashing in the kids college fund, because now © Gateway and Dell have entered the mix. The new 42-inch Dell, the W4200HD, lists for $ 3,499. The Super Bowl? Your friend can 'come to your house this time. (Www.dell.com) iPod Most cold? It's a lighter! It's a lock! No, it's the tony, ultratiny Network Walkman NW-MS90D Sony. This Lilliputian device measures only 1 1/2-by-2-by-3/4 inches and weighs 1.9 ounces à about one-third the weight of Apple iPod. With only 512 MB of flash memory, enough for 340 songs, it has nothing close to the iPod's capacity, of course. But you can add storage with memory à Sony STICKA. The sound is fantastic. But it looks là Walkman that draws stares from passersby. $ (399.95, www.sonystyle.com) Lights! Sound! Action! The Panasonic D-Snap SV-AV50 is the Man of consumer Renaissance à an impressive update of the SV-AS10 last year. This version is a video camera for all practical purposes, MPEG4 recording at 30 frames per second. It also takes 2-megapixel still images, play two hours of MP3 files (with a 64MB SD card.) and records the voice. (It sucks your car or watching your kids for the evening, I'm sorry. In addition, the 2-inch screen, flip-and-twist is brilliant. Take this and put it in his pocket. $ (399.99, www.panasonic.com.) Let it snow! This is not your father's snowmobile. Well, right, your father never owned a snowmobile. But you want one, right? Yamaha has adapted his vehicle RX-1 with new parts in titanium and magnesium. The result: a sled which is 30 pounds lighter and built to fly. The RX-1 packs a 145 horsepower, four-stroke, four-cylinder engine à probably more power than you need à with an upper management. . it is an impressive technology package and easy to use that also meets environmental standards for 2006 $ (9,099 www.yamahamotor.com) cursory Starck. Apple was the first to realize that the things the computer should not be boring. Now the rest of the industry is coming, the last Microsoft: an optical mouse designed by Philippe Starck, famous for the Paramount Hotel Oh-so-cool. Starck is in simplicity, durability and effectiveness. We tested the mouse Starck FC here at the Labs. Simple? Yes'. Talisman? We abandoned more than once, and keeps ticking. Effective? It's not better or worse than others hurt him. (© Why not wireless, we wonder?) But with its silver body and a racing stripe down the illuminated center, looks fantastic. Your computer simply has to have one. $ (34.95, www.microsoft.com) Give Or, you may stop feeding the technological beast. Put that $ 399 towards, say, making the world better place. here are three worthy and innovative alternatives for your money and time. five years ago, while teaching in high school in south bronx, charles best took care ofthe lack of supply and financing. It didn't take much for Best to find a solution: a website where teachers could send donations for specific projects. Since then, Best's DonorsChoose.org has combined donors with 4,000 projects worth US$2.1 million per classroom in New York, North Carolina, Chicago and San Francisco Bay Area. The patrons can finance anything from SAT textbooks at a field trip to Yankee Stadium, where otherwise reluctant math students face baseball calculation. "DonorsChoose allows teachers not only to go public with learning needs in classrooms, but also to unleash their fantasies on the best ideas to help students learn." Best says. Donors receive notes from the teacher (not on your vows, for once), and for gifts of over $100, from students too. Volunteering abroad Imagine taking six months of work to volunteer with poor children in a developing country. Building-Blocks (www.blocks.org) can make it happen. A kind of Peace Corps for companies, BuildingBlocks puts professionals with community organizations in 48 countries for six weeks and a year. Voluntary assignments bring valuable expertise to participating community groups and their customers. But the founder of BuildingBlocks Jennifer Anastasoff says that even "prepare leaders of the 21st century who can work in different sectors." Companies build their talent base and volunteers learn new leadership skills. BuildingBlocks is mainly looking for volunteers for the program: you can apply online. But Anastasoff won't give up money donations. A $200 gift, he says, is enough to help the equivalent of 100 children for a year and to help ensure the survival of a community group. Send baseball to Iraq Everything started with baseball. Sergeant Jay Smith, a special force officer in Afghanistan, started a Little League team with money collected from his wife and community. He taught Afghan children to play ball; in return, the premises helped protect the American base from Al Qaeda attacks. When technology entrepreneur Jim Hake heard Smith's story, he knew he was looking for from September 11: a way to help. He began Spirit of America (www.spiritofamerica.net) to support projects sponsored by American military and civilians for the people of Iraq and Afghanistan. As with DonorsChoose, donors select a project on the website, then click to donate money or goods. Spirit of America has funded almost 25 projects, from football to television equipment. "It's person-to-person interaction," Hake says, "a way to improve relationships, change perceptions and nudge countries and communities indirection". "
