Special Areas of Conservation <sup>3</sup> Designated. Special Area of Conservation (SAC) PaAs England Devon Centroid* S5451348 Latitude 51.0911 Longitude -4.2122 SAC <sup>3</sup> EU UK0012570 Status Designated. Special Area of Conservation (SAC)Á rea (ha) 1339.74 * This is the approximate central point of the SAC. In the case of large, linear or composite sites, this may not represent the location <sup>3</sup> where a function occurs <sup>3</sup> within the SAC. Location <sup>3</sup> Braunton Burrows SAC CarÁocter of general site Coastal sand dunes, sandy beaches, Machair (85%) Shingle, marine cliffs, islets (1%) Inland water bodies (standing water, running water) (1%) Heath, Scrub, Maquis and Garrigue, Phytgrana (3%) Improved grassland (5%) Wide leaf deciduous forest (5%) Annex I habitats that are a main race<sup>n</sup> the selection of this great site <sup>3</sup> the south-west of England contains a substantial area of <sup>3</sup> vegetation of <sup>3</sup> dunes, including representative habitats examples of the largest of the major variants found in the south-west of the United Kingdom. There are a good number of specialized plants that are unique to this regionÁ <sup>3</sup> n, such as the Portland <sup>3</sup>n sponge Euphorbia portlandica, the sea <sup>3</sup> Euphorbia paralias and the marine holly Eryngium maritimum. Transitions to the loose dune and fixed dune are a prominent feature of this site. Braunton Burrows, in southwest England, is one of the largest dunes sites in the UK and is of particular importance because it is virtually intact and still active. There are very extensive areas of species-rich calcÁ rea dune meadows with good examples from a variety of important communities. Short grass areas are extremely rich in herbs and lichens, including a number of rare species nationwide. Blooming herbs such as Thymus large thyme pulegioides, the comAn Ononis repens and pÁojaro comAn Á s-pie-trefoil Lotus corniculatus are locally dominant. Braunton Burrows is one of the largest sites of virtually intact dunes in the UK and is representative of With Salix Repends SSP. Argentea in the southwest of England. Habitat is scattered throughout the site and is part of a complex mosaic of vegetation that contains willow crawling, including early and ripe successive stages of loose dunes vegetation. There are transition stages between this type and further rummer vegetation. Braunton Burrows is one of the largest virtually intact dunes sites in the United Kingdom, with an exceptionally large surface of hard dunes, which represents an important part of the national resource. The scales have been trained in sand rich in bases and are rich in species such as Pennywort Hydrocotyle vulgaris, Helleborina Epipactis palustris and winter green of round leaves pyrrola rotundifolia. The types of vegetation range from those with almost permanent water to those dominated by scrubs. The site contains representative examples of most communities of rich-rich scales in bases of southwestern England, namely those characterized by the Salix Repends SSP willow, Argentea, those with brioffites or those with yorkshire fog Holcus lanatus. 1395 PETALOPHYLLUM RALFSII A great populatíon has been recorded (around 3000 thalli) from Petalophyllum Ralfsii in Braunton Burrows, one of the two sites selected for this species in southwestern England. There are extensive habitats of open dunes of the types that this species needs to survive. Applications of Application II present as eligible feature, but not as the main reason for the site selection, many designated sites are found on private land: the inclusion of a site in these pages does not imply any public access right. Braunton Burrows is a dunes system on the north coast of Devon, located between the beach of Saunton Sands and Braunton. Braunton Burrows is the largest sand dunes system England and is particularly important ecologically as it includes a full range of dune plant communities, with more than 400 species of vascular plants. For example, this is one of only two sites in the UK for the Sandbowl Sandbowl Sandinella arenaria, which is found in the wet trousers of the dunes. The Braunton Burrows welcomes dog walkers, but asks that the dogs be kept under control because of the birds nesting on land and grazing livestock. It is important that you pick up after your dogs as waste can have a detrimental effect on the environment. Horses are also welcome. The Burrows is often used by the military for training purposes so that you can see or hear vehicles and blur bullets fired. The Route The hike starts and ends at the Braunton Burrows parking lot on Sandy Lane. Exit the parking lot, head west towards Burrows through the front door and follow the signs to South West Coastal Path. After a short walk the coastal road leads to the right, but you will continue through another set of gates and into the Burrows. Please note that there are no signs on the Burrows, but the route follows a clear and defined vehicle track. The runway is mostly sandy, but can be muddy in some parts and is prone to water cutting during the winter months. The route takes you to Burrows, where you will turn right, following a track that follows mainly the perimeter fence. The burrows are divided into three zones and the walk takes place in zone 2, so be careful not to cross any fence. Eventually, the track will circle around and you will find yourself back on the track where you started your journey.
