USC Doheny Memorial Library. Margje Politzer / Getty Images The University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Business frequently tops the rankings for both undergraduate and graduate business programs, so it should come as little surprise that Penn's accounting program made this list. Indeed, BYU's Marriott School of Accountancy tends to rank among the top two or three places for undergraduates to study accounting in the country. OSU's Fisher College of Business ranks #15 in U.S. News & World Report, and the accounting program ranks #10. Christopher Schmidt / Flickr Housed within the Gies College of Business, accounting at UIUC ranks #2 in U.S. News & World Report. All Wharton undergraduate students take Accounting 101 and 102, and students with an accounting concentration continue with Accounting 201 and 202, as well as classes in cost accounting, tax planning, and auditing. Students can participate in short-term and summer global programs, a semester exchange, or a global study & internship program. Accounting students are encouraged to pursue internships to gain hands-on experience; the university's Undergraduate Career Services helps students find a meaningful placement. As an accountant, you might be self-employed, or you might work for an accounting or tax preparation firm, an insurance company, the government, or a company's business office. Like many schools on this list, Penn does not offer an accounting major, but students can major in business with an accounting concentration. A total of 99% find jobs related to their major, and in 2018 they earned an average starting salary of $65,847. The Ross School offers students numerous ways to gain global experiences while studying business. Graduates of the undergraduate program have a 98% job placement rate, and their skills are sought after by a range range of employers. The curriculum is standardized so that instruction is the same no matter who is teaching the course. Median salaries are around $70,000 a year, but that number can vary significantly depending on where you are employed and what type of accounting work you are doing. Over 700 companies in the U.S. and around the world recruit Kelley graduates each year. The best accounting schools have accomplished faculty members, strong reputations, a breadth of curricular options, and opportunities to gain hands-on experience through research, internships, or summer work programs. It his home to seven accounting and business student organizations, and the Accounting Research Colloquium brings in speakers from around the world to present and discuss their work. Like all top accounting programs, OSU places an emphasis on a rigorous curriculum combined with numerous hands-on experiences. The mean annual starting salary for Stern graduates is over $80,000. A defining feature of Notre Dame's program is TAP, the Tax Assistance Program, where students gain real-world experience helping low-income clients prepare their taxes. The school has over 200 full-time faculty members, and admission is remarkably selective. The mean SAT score for matriculated students is 1468. Global fellowships are available to make these experiences possible. The class of 2021 has 490 accounting majors. The university graduates close to 1,000 business students each year, and about a quarter of them specialize in accounting. New York University. U.S. News & World Report ranked the business program #10 in the country and the accounting major #4. Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah. The program graduates about 100 students a year at the bachelor's level. Accounting students can gain practical experience working with a public or private enterprise in Accounting Practicum, or they can enroll in Independent Research in Accounting.
